Haworth is a charming village located in West Yorkshire, England. It has a population of about 6,733 people as recorded in the 2021 census. The village is known for its historical significance and picturesque setting in the Pennines, a range of hills and mountains.

The origin of Haworth dates back to 1209. The name likely refers to a "hedged enclosure" or "hawthorn enclosure." Over the years, it has transformed into a popular tourist destination, largely due to its connection with the Brontë sisters, famous authors of classic English literature.

Haworth is surrounded by beautiful nature and offers various outdoor activities. Visitors can explore the Brontë Parsonage Museum, take a ride on the heritage Keighley and Worth Valley Railway, or hike along the scenic Brontë Way. The village is also known for its vibrant cultural scene, including events like the annual 1940s weekend and the Haworth Arts Festival.

The village is small in size but offers a rich cultural life. It is close to bigger cities like Bradford and Leeds, making it easily accessible for day trips. For transport, Haworth is well connected by bus services to nearby towns such as Keighley and Hebden Bridge.

One of the unique features of Haworth is its steep, cobbled Main Street lined with tea rooms, antique shops, and historic pubs. The Black Bull pub is particularly famous as it was frequented by Branwell Brontë. The village is also a Fairtrade Village, promoting fair trade practices.

Haworth offers a delightful blend of history, culture, and natural beauty, making it a must-visit destination for anyone interested in England's rich literary heritage and scenic landscapes.
